

Understanding Jersey WaterCheck Data - Data Sources and Methodologies

Overview

This document explains the following related to Jersey WaterCheck:

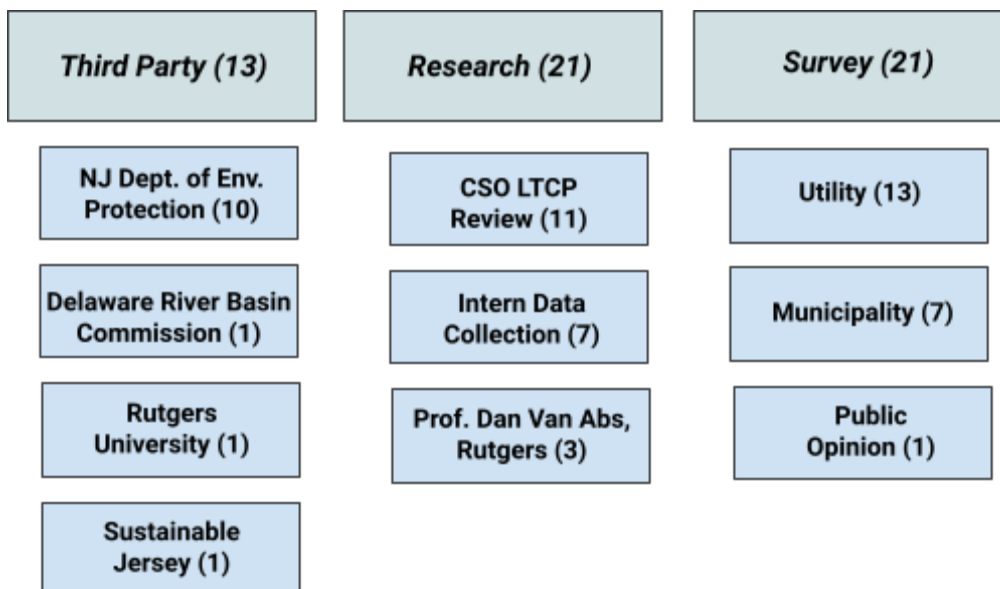

- An overview of all data sources used
- Methodologies for system characteristics and metrics that required analysis beyond data gathering, such as the affordability metrics and population served
- Tables of the regional sewer system rates by municipality

This document has been reviewed by the Jersey Water Check data advisory committee.

Data

Data Sources

The data were collected from three main sources: third party, research, and survey. Third party sources include external organizations such as the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection (NJDEP), the Delaware River Basin Commission (DRBC), Rutgers University, and Sustainable Jersey. Research includes data collection, a review of the CSO Long Term Control Plans, and an affordability study conducted by Professor Dan Van Abs at Rutgers University. There were three surveys issued: one to utility leaders, one to municipal officials, and one to the public (i.e., public opinion survey).

NJDEP

Data from NJDEP was provided by staff contacts within the Division of Water Supply and Geoscience (for drinking water system data) and the Division of Water Quality (for wastewater system data). Data from the Delaware River Basin Commission was provided by staff contacts pertaining to non-revenue water. Data from both Rutgers University and Sustainable Jersey was obtained from their websites.

CSO LTCPs

On October 1, 2020 the 24 CSO permittees submitted draft Long Term Control Plans to the NJDEP (found here). The Jersey Water Works CSO Committee conducted a review of the plans and simultaneously compiled data to inform the relevant Jersey WaterCheck metrics.

Research

From June to December 2020, interns hired by New Jersey Future collected data to inform some of the Jersey WaterCheck metrics, such as the number of clicks to reach financial information and utility rates. This was conducted via internet searches, as well as emails and phone follow-ups.

Professor Dan Van Abs at Rutgers University has conducted a research study on the affordability of water and wastewater services in New Jersey, which has informed the relevant affordability metrics such as percent of households stressed by water/wastewater utility bills.

Two surveys, one to utility leaders and one to municipal officials, were administered, with the help of New Jersey Future interns, by Jersey Water Works backbone staff to collect data for certain metrics. These surveys were sent with a two week deadline. A third public opinion survey, which was distributed through Qualtrics, was conducted to ascertain public support for water infrastructure investment. This survey was also sent with a two week deadline.

Before the launch of the Jersey WaterCheck dashboard, utility leaders (to the extent that contact information could be found) were sent copies of their data for review and were allowed to send comments and corrections.

Methodologies

Population Served

NJDEP has data on the population served by each of their water supply systems (PWSID), but not on the wastewater systems (NJPDES). In order to calculate population served for both the water (PWSID) and wastewater (NJPDES) systems, a spatial analysis was conducted using GIS, using the service area, the population count by Census Tract, and residential areas via a land use layer. These population counts were also used to inform the percentage of households that are stressed by water bills for the affordability study.

Below are the general steps of the spatial analysis:

1. The water and sewer service area layers were overlaid with the Census tract layer, which were joined with population estimates (American Community Survey 2014-2018).
2. The land use/land cover 2015 layer was cut to only include residential areas and then that layer was overlaid with the resulting layer from step 1
3. The percentage of the residential area within the polygons were used to calculate the population of the polygon, using the equation as follows:

$$\frac{\text{Residential area of polygon}}{\text{Total residential area of tract}} = \frac{\text{Population of the polygon}}{\text{Total population of host Census tract}}$$

4. The population of the polygons for a given system were summed to get the total population for that system.

Municipalities Served

QGIS was also used to assign the municipalities served, which were cross-checked with the data that NJDEP provides via DataMiner (Report Category > Water Supply and Geoscience > Safe Drinking Water > “What Municipalities are Served by My Water System”). Some systems may include overestimates of the systems served due to very small areas of the extraneous municipalities falling under the system’s service area. The spatial analysis attempted to remove these slivers to the best extent possible to avoid this error.

Cost of Drinking Water and Wastewater Service

Utility rates were obtained through intern data collection. This rate information was sourced from Board of Public Utilities tariff sheets, utility web pages, municipal codes, and often from direct communication with utilities by phone or email. These rates were then applied assuming 45,000 gallons of annual usage to obtain the annual cost, which was then divided by 12 to obtain the monthly cost.

For sewer utilities (usually regional authorities) that serve multiple municipalities, given that each municipality had different rates, a weighted average was calculated using population estimates from the American Community Survey (2014-2018 5 year estimates). The tables of these sewer utilities, with estimated annual rates for each municipality, are included in the last section of this document.

Percentage of Stressed Households
